PRINCIPAL A. L. PARKER

(Appointed Juy 1, 1942)

To all members of the Lewis and Clark Family - wherever you may be: Greetings and Best Wishes!

Those of you who are still in school and those of you who are out in the world-in homes, in civilian work, in defense jobs, in camps, and on battlefields-have heard me say many times that the highest praise that can be given to any individual is that he is a good citizen.

A good citizen is happy, courteous, and industrious; knows the value of time; gives willingly of himself: makes individual decisions; is willing to serve mankind.

May this school and community benefit in the future, as it has benefited in the past, by your endeavors! This school is always proud of your achievements.

NEW VICE-PRINCIPAL

William W. Taylor, former mathematics instructor, was appointed last summer as the new vice-principal, succeed. ing A. L. Parker, who became principal after the passing of Truman G. Reed. Mr. Taylor came to Lewis and Clark in 1935 from Cut Bank. Montana, where he last taught. He is a graduate of Carleton college in Northfield, Minnesota, and has a master of arts degree from the University of Minnesota.

Harlan Hewitt, and Wanda Lee Gregory.

During October the school collected several thousand magazines for the Red Cross, which sent them on to military camps. In the lower picture Mary June Smith and Curtis Mhyre are helping to classify and tie the reading matter.

The school promoted the war effort and community service by a number of drives. The upper picture shows Jeanne Rotchford exhibiting a quantity of keys brought in as valuable metal. the students spent the week of October 23 to 30 combing hidden nooks and corners hunting for them.

The senior boys did the'r part in the Victory Corps plan by cooperating in the required five-day-a-week physical fitness program. Shown in the upper picture are a group taking some of their setting-up exercises.

Among the pre-induction courses sponsored by the school were Latin for nurses and physics with a war slant. The physics work emphasized fundamental principles behind aviation and many other branches of modern war. Top picture: Phyllis Rooney. Virginia Paping. Carol Stone, and Nedra Bundy. Bottom picture: Myron Oswald and Tom Summerson (facing cameral and Bob McDowell and Gerry MacCallum.

Fifty girls were enrolled in the two classes in home nursing, one of the required pre-induction courses for which they were, if successful, awarded their Red Cross certificates. The nurse in the lower picture is Opal Rob inson and the patient is Jessie Womack. Observers are (left to right): Betty Jean Lindman, Helen Keegan, Marjorie McDonald, Jean Crr Peggy Kikida. ## PROPHECY

This is station LCHS bringing you another episode in the life of Bill Brown, the renowned traveler, sponsored by the "No Trouble With Double Bubble Soap Flake Co." In just a moment, we will bring you the story, but first. a word from our sponsor.
"Are your shirts and sheets white, or are they green, red, or blue? If they are the latter, use No Trouble With Double Bubble' soap flakes to remove ugly dirt, grease, and lipstick. The next time you are down at your corner grocers, say 'Double Bubble please

And now the story: The rain pounded on the roof of the car as the train sped on its seemingly end ess path toward the big city. New York. It's in the rear of the club car where we meet our traveler. Bill Brown, stretched out in a large comfortable chair with a copy of the home town paper. The Spokane Daily Ironical spread over his face.

Suddenly Bill feels the presence of someone leaning over him, so without hesitation he removes the paper from his face and looks up at the person standing at his feet. "Sorry if I disturbed you." said the man. "I was just looking at the headlines of your paper: it's my home town news," he added. Bill kept staring up at the face before him, trying to place the familiar features. Then, almost as if he was the man himself he placed the name. "Aren t you TOM ANDERSON?" "Why yes," he replied. "And you're Bil Brown, my old class mate. Well. well. I haven't seen you since back in old Lewis and Clark.

After hashing over old times, the two men bid goodnight and headed for their respective cars. When BB (BB will be the form we will use instead of Bill Brown) reached the sleeper, he found that his berth was not yet made up, so he caled the porter. DICK BASS, to come and make it up for him. After he had finished, BB gave him a large tip and turned in for the night

By the time he had awakened in the morning. the speedy train had a ready arrived at its destination New York, and was pulling into Reed Station, named after the great railroad man GERVAIS REED. As he entered the depot, he saw DICK WEYER in the information booth, telling a young married couple, JIM KIELHACK and NATALIE WERNER, which direction the famous Broadway was. Upon hearing the necessary information and having no other place to go. BB decided to go out on a sight seeing tour up Broadway so he checked his luggage with the baggage clerk. STAN SALERNO. and headed out toward the big street.

As he rounded Seventy-eighth street, he sow a crowd of people standing around the entrance of a big theater. Upon approaching it, he found that HELEN QUINN was putting her footprint into some wet cement after she had won fame and the Academy award for her star performance in the picture "Pickette's Folly" which was named after the great producer. PAUL PICKETTE.

When the crowd had cleared away, he saw that JANE THOMPSON had founded a smart hat shoppe next to the theater and had employed MAGGY PERRY, DORIS and DOROTHY CRESSY. LOIE POWER, and MARY JEAN SMITH, as models to display the new hats designed by BOB ROWLEY.
$B B$ 's thought changed to food, so he entered a large club cafe around the corner, owned by BOB COL . BURN. There he found a table near the floor show where a bevy of beautiful girls were dancing. Among them were: BETTY TRIPLETT. ANNA WARSAW PAT BAUER. RUTH BERKEY, ELIZABETH HADLEY, CANDACE SMITH, JEAN ROTCHFORD, and LUCILLE RANDALL. The woiter, BOB CLINE, took his order, so BB sot back to listen to the soft music of BOB MULLAY and his orchestra. The orchestra was composed of TOM CENIS, N. A. ROLFE, JERRY BENNETT, CHARLES STORY, TED VOLBERDING HIRO MIYAGAWA. GARTH TURNER. and BRUCE TAYLOR.

After his meal, BB headed back to the station to pick up his luggage and to get passage on some liner bound for Europe. According to his ticket, he was to be aboard by 3 o'clock the S. S. MacArthur, the new modern ship named after the famous General MacArthur. So he raced down to the roadway and hurriedly got into a waiting cab driven by one ED VOTAVA, and rushed to the pier.

GERRY MCCALLUM, the captain, and MARVIN RUEBINS, the first mate, welcomed tim aboard ship, and invited him to join them at the captain's table for dinner that night. He accepted and retired to his cabin.

That night, seated around the table were all of the most distinguished passengers aboard ship. Among them were: PAT SPELMAN, the famous linguist: MARTIN HUMPHREY, the n ne ed jews-harpist: MABEL WHITE, the bubble dancer; debutante JEANNE ORR, who was returning to her home in Paris with her chum BETTE CON. NELL: NORMAN BUSLEE, the honored general of World War II; and DICK SATY, the scientist.

After eating o delicious meal and after hoving a pleasant chat with the captain. BB went into the card room where he found several men, ROY DIMOND. DICK GRAHAM, BOB WELCH and MAURICE WICKHAM, being "taken" in the new fascinating game, "gin poker" by BOB JOHNSON, the professional skier from Switzerland. BB joined in but was forced out in a few hands because of insufficient funds and because he had already lost his watch, wallet, and most of his clothing.

Later that night, our traveler went up on the top deck where a dance was in progress. He noticed DOR OTHY OWEN and BETTY LINDMAN, the cigaret girls. flirting with TOME TERAO, the financier. While sitting at the bar he saw MARY JO WILLIAMS singing one of thenew "smack-parade" tunes, "I Don't Want to Die So Young," which was written by the famous composer. DON MCKENZIE.

Some of the people dancing were: Mr. and Mrs. FRANCIS NORTON (his wife was the former YGERNE CATER): RALPH NELSON and JACKIE CHARLETON, the champion itter-bug dancers in competition with GAIL GUNN and DEAN CARMICHAEL: BETTY SKINNER with her hubby DAVE ROGERS, who are returning from their home in the mountains in Finland which was designed by the famous architect DICK BOWERS; and HARLOW HOTRUM and his partner MARY QUINLAN, who won the Nobel prize in 1953. for her new language.

Since he was only half awake he decided to take a stroll around the deck in hopes that the fresh ocean air would clear his head. Just outside his cabin door sat HARRY AUMACK and BETTE BROSINSKE. who were fishing. They had their shoes off and strings with hooks tied to their big toes, in hopes that they might have some salt water trout for their breakfast.

Two weeks pass before we pick up our story again. The renowned traveler has landed and is in Paris. He is staying ot the Hotel Carlson, the largest hatel there which is owned by ALAN CARLSON the boxer. When registering. BB noticed in the lobby, several well known people: JUNE BERKEY, ANN BERNARD CHARLES GROHS, TED ALLEN. MARILYN BLUE, AUDREY CAUDILL, and BETTE CHAMPAGNE.

Upon passing a large building, BB noticed that it was The Davenport Bugle, owned by BOB DAVENPORT, which was the only newspaper in all France that was printed in Hebrew. The members of the staff, SID SCHU: LEIN, BILL BELL, and LIL MITCHELL, were all busy reading the next Sunday's funny paper.

He then proceeded up the street to the Paris art gallery, where he found DICK NELSON and SHIRLEY STOWE arguing over the price of KEN MOORE'S picture. The Whirlwind. Down at the other end of the hall, BB saw ALICE WOOFTER teaching EILEEN CALKINS, OLIVE BOCK, BEV CHANDLER. MAXINE FREEMAN, HELEN GAMBLE. JOHN NERRAS, LORRAINE FIMAN and BEV NEILAN the finer points of art while she was gazing upon DONNA DUFFE'S painting. "One Night in Arabia."

Finding the art gallery dull, he returned to his hotel where he stopped in at the coffee shop to get a cup of tea. While drinking the beverage, he overhead a group of men, ALVIN CHESTER, AL CISMOSSKI, MICKEY DUKICH, and JIM ARNETT, discussing details about the new process by which green lipstick can be removed from white collars. The new method was discovered by BOB COLPITTS, after his wife, WINIFRED RICE, discovered some on his collar. Before dinner, BOB had called her and told her that he would be late, because he had some extra research to do with his secretary. SHIRLEY COLDEEN.

The elevator boy, BILL COBLE, opened the doors on the ninety-ninth floor on which BB had his suite of rooms. He nearly tripped over FLORENCE ANDREWS, the house detective, while looking at the new roomer, MARJORIE AHLSTEDT. She was in Paris in competition with PHYLLIS HINKLEY, in the world queen contest. Unlocking his door, he saw a telegram on the floor. It was from his brother in America who had had an auto accident with RAMONA CHRISTENSON, who was suing him for breach of promise. He had lost all of his money and now wanted $B B$ to send him enough to cover the expenses of hiring the family lawyer. HOWARD ALLISON.

After cooling down, BB decided to send the necessary cash, provided his brother would not ask forlany more. His brother had had three wives: PEARL COLDEEN, VIRGINIA DANKE, and BETTY DANIEL, all of which had sued him for one reason or another. Each time, he had called on BB to help him through the case so as not to drag the family name through the courts.

The traveler put on his tuxedo and called a private car that night. Since this would be his only night in France, he thought he might as well enjoy it. So while waiting for the car, he chatted with DAVE FINNEY, the mounted patrolman. He found out that ED GEORGE and BILL CAVERS had been badly hurt when they were mixed up in a brawl down at AL BAKER'S ping pong gym. It seemed that HARRY FEISE had won a game from VIRGIL DYMOND by default, so BILL AITCHISON. the umpire, called the game void. ED and BILL started slinging ping pong balls but were put out by the bouncer. FRANK KELLEY, before the police arrived.

When BB's car pulled up, he hopped in and directed the driver. BILL JENKINS, to take him to the biggest night club in Paris. When they reached it, he found it to be owned by GEORGE RAYMOND, who once owned the club 60 back in America. This club was a very expensive place and one had to show his credentials before he could enter. BB had none but flashed a large bank-roll and was immediately admitted.

In the gambling room, he saw RUSSELL SHANK running the roulette wheel, and LELAND SAHLIN shak.ng the bones. After losing a few thousand to each of these gentlemen, BB went out to the bar where he had one of his favorites, a double Booth.

The floor show, composed of GAIN RANKIN, BETTY PYMM, MARY and MARGARET HEIMBACH, PATTY HINTON, JANET REESE, WILLA JO HALL, and ELIZABETH HALIN was unlike most you would see. The girls wore men's clothing and jitter-bugged to ANTONE REMSING'S new tune, "When the Rising Sun Went Down." RON WARNER and his Septet from Hunger, played through the complete evening without stopping. They were trying to outplay the famous all-girt orchestra which was made up of: RUTH McGINNIS, JULIA TAGARIELLO, CAROLMAE MURRAY, DOROTHEA THOMPSON, VIRGINIA MILLER, BESSE NEWELL, and PEGGY LOU MILLER, who had played ninety-two hours without stopping.

There were many prominent people scattered throughout the club. There in the corner was ELEANOR WAR. REN, the newly elected mayor of New York; LOWELL THOMAS and his wife who was the former ELOISE MEAD; NANCY LUSK, the opera singer: MARY LEE MASTERSON and her escort, MICKEY MCGUIRE; and the noted baritone quintet. JIM MCDOLE, JOHN PETERSON, GEORGE YAMADA and BOYD WALKER.

Early the next morning he was awakened by the telephone. It was his brother. It seemed that he really was in a bad way because he had killed RAMON'S cat in the auto accident and was being tried for second degree murder. The family lawyer would not take the case if BB was not there to assist, so our traveler made up his mind to return to America and clear the name of Brown of the crime.

He packed his luggage and bought a ticket on the S. S. MILLER the fastest ship in the world, and was on his way home by 10 o'clock that morning. He intended to be with his brother in Spokane by the twelfth which was only four days away. The ship, which had a crew of only three men: MITSU YUASA. HENRY MONTIETH. IRVING MENANO, was on a direct radio beam with New York and used no fuel.

When the boat landed, BB quickly found his way to the railroad station where he boarded the mail train bound for home. He sot up with the engineer, JIM MAXWELL, and help shovel coal into the boiler with KERMIT PEARSON. By noon, the following day, they were pulling into the ROBERT JANSSEN station, near the New National Bank building. When the train stopped. BB rushed to the police station so as to get to the court room. When he arrived, the court was already in session, and had been in session for two hours. The jury was just returning with the final verdict. Through a slit between the court room doors. BB could hear the head juryman, GEORGE YAMAMOTO, announcing, "We find the defendant NOT GUILTY."

Even though BB was very mod at his brother for making him return to America for such a simple case, he congratulated him. When they had passed the police station and were coming to an alley, BB hit his brother and knocked him down. The startled brother got up from the ground and said, "Even if my shirt is dirty, I can clean it with the new soap. 'NO TROUBLE WITH DOUBLE BUBBLE'." and the brothers walked home in an even stride. And this is your announcer wishing you lots of luck in his prophecy.

The Boys' Federation in cooperation with other school organizations tries to assist the boys in planning and preparing for the future. Now, because of present conditions, it is placing most of its attention on senior boys, and boys 17 and 18 years of age. The Federation is trying to keep them in full knowledge of all new draft laws and of the different parts of the armed forces in which they are qualified to enlist. It is trying to see that the boys are placed in positions they are best fitted for, and that they thoroughly understand the conditions of the place in which they are to enter.

All boys of the school are members.

"WE McGURKS ARE FIGHTERS"

Lorraine Fiman

The tenseness in the air, the suffocating heat of nervousness, the feeling of thousands of eyes searching his soul-all these things stifled Joe McGurk until he thought his lungs would have to burst in order to emit his pentup emotions and allow fresh air to enter.

Clean-shaven, hair slicked down, as immaculately dressed as one could be in such a situation, Joe suffered innumerable periods of watching the clock and looking back at his watch, comparing the two-yet knowing that the moment would soon arrive when He wouldn't think about it in the few minutes left.

As he sat, teeth clenched, his mind paced up and down, careful not to step outside the lines of the wooden-planked floor. He remembered that day about four years ago when, as a green kid, he had entered the institution. He remembered the perilous times he'd had and the orders of the big boss, "We must not fail in the job we have to do." No. he hadn't failed-that's why he was here now. The big boss had put him on the spot.

He tried to loosen the stiff collar, but fingers now grown into thumbs could not cope with the starched brace. "O God, would they never come to him?"

The ordinarily imperceptible ticking of his watch penetrated into his racked brain. "Does everyone faced by this suffer so?"

He tried to think of what his father had told him when the bully next door had blackened his eye-"We McGurks are fighters, son. We have the will to win. That black eye doesn't mean you're licked. Your spirit is unconquerable." His father had sent him out, and Joe had come back with the other eye black and a grin on his face. He had made the bully yell "quits."

Finally, he heard someone call his name, and he straightened his tie. He lifted his head high . . . "We McGurks are fighters."

Then, in manly style fitting to the family tradition, Joseph Aloysius McGurk calmly stepped forth to receive his diploma.

MUSIC OF THE WIND

Anna Maria Jones

The wind singing in my ears is like a string symphony.
High above the pines it rises in crescendo:
Soft, sibilant, soothing: like a violin.
Then, with change of tempo I hear the violas,
Resonant, woody, mellow: like old wine.
Quickly, at the crest of the hill it swings to the Deep throbbing tones of the bass viol.
Then again adagio, rushing, swirling, growing in volume.
Until it fades away into the pulsating echo of the wind.

SO THIS IS WAR

Virginia Plain
To most of us, "So this is war" isn't just a phrase that was used on a Saturday night radio program; it isn't a catch phrase to scare us into buying War Bonds, it's a hard, glaring fact that must be faced frankly and without flinching by the 135,000,000 people of the United States.

Out in the Solomons our boys are fighting to the death, in Africa they march to victory. in China they fly over the camps of the little brown brothers, dropping missiles of destruction, and in Australia they prepare for great things to come.

But here at home we too are being called upon for greater sacrifices. Besides giving up to a great extent our sugar, coffee, gasoline, and meat, we will soon be called upon to give a good-sized proportion of our wages. We are collecting scrap metal, giving time to the Red Cross, and many women are going to work that men may fight.

Mother is learning to remodel last year's dress to save material. Dad is getting used to the idea of one razor blade a week, the kid brother to the idea that when these are gone there won't be any more tires for his bike. Baby sister now plays carefully with dishes, dolls, and toys because they aren't apt to be so plentiful later on. It isn't an individual sacrifice that we are called upon to makeit's a family duty to be done.

Americans aren't the weak-kneed sissies the totalitarians would have their people believe; neither are we the rank wastrels the Japanese claim us to be. Perhaps our government is a little slow and bungling, perhaps the people are a bit un-cooperative, but back of it all lies national unity, a unity that was not cultivated by a firing squad.

From the sky-scraping towers of New York city, across the plains of the Middle West to the mountains of the Pacific coast, live hundreds of thousands of families who are learning what it is to fight a war against monsters who would rule the world.
This isn't a war of the capitalist. It's a war of the people, as it is a war of the people in many other lands. The conquered countries fight with sticks and knives against guns and tanks, but man will meet man, and the aggressor will be vanquished.

This is our prayer of victory-our hope for the future:

When all seems but lost, Though our cause is so just Let this be our motto: In God is our trust."

KILLED!

Gloria Jones

Why do people cry? Because of the sorrow they feel for others? No, we shed tears because we feel sorry for ourselves.

Our best friend was killed. He was killed in an airplane crash, and now he has left us forever. We remember our certain handshake by which we would quietly tell each other our secrets. We even used to call each other the "big four." Yes, I know it does sound silly but we were honestly so sincere. The strength of this bond of friendship can only be realized by one of us four.

He was my house guest this summer, just before he went into the Air Corps. It was fun proudly to present my friend to my parents, my sister, and my beloved dog, Inky. who at once took to him.

He wanted to get a Jap so badly. I'm sorry God didn't give him just a few more months to live.

The "big four" went to his home town last spring vacation for about five days. I think we had the time of our lives. His mother was so nice to us.

I guess we just can't realize yet that he has gone. He was really the best looking and most considerate boy I have ever seen. Why didn't God see fit to take me or some one else instead of him?

We remaining three have never cried so much since we were babies. The funeral is at $2 \mathrm{p} . \mathrm{m}$. Saturday and the whole class is going, to pay their last respects to a real friend.

Now I sit here alone, ready to go to the funeral in an hour. Many, many different thoughts whirl in the muddle of sorrow my brain feels. Why did I cry? Did I cry because I could see him going through a living hell and the hand of death slowly choking life from his veins until his resistance could stand no more?
No, I cried because I would miss him, his handshake and his secrets. I must be very selfish, but I wouldn't be human if I could stop thinking of him in just a fraction of my lifetime. I know that I shall never forget him,

SONNET

Marian Smith
Beyond the moving crowd I saw you standing there
So tall. You looked at me
With unknowing eyes and I could see
Reflected in your eyes that you were unaware Of my curious and impolite stare.
Did you turn as I went by? And could it be You smiled a little-just a little at me?
I wanted to smile back at you, but I didn't dare.
Months have gone by; yes, six months ago
I saw you. How strange I should remember yet
Your unassuming glance. Isn't it odd I should know
Your blonde hair waved and parted on the left?
If again we should meet, then pass as strangers do.
Were you to turn and smile at me; I would smile back at you.

THE AERONAUTS

Gervais Reed

There was at one time in one of the lesser kingdoms of the Old World a craftsman of most extraordinary skill named Daedalus. He came by his abilities honestly as shown by mythology which declares that the famed Labyrinth of the minotaur was designed, oh so craftily, and built, oh how shrewdly, by an earlier Daedalus. This shows that our Daedalus was no piker with ancestors like that. No sir.

Contemporary with this skilled personage lived a cruel and tyrannical king whose name has been lost in the wilderness of time. This monarch, being desirous of fame and distinction, employed our brave builder to construct for him something wondrous and fine at wages far below the standard scale. This was entirely too much for Daedalus so, outspoken man that he was, he refused the king's nig. gardly offer in terms vulgar and disrespectful.

This, in turn, was too much for the king and so, the balance of power being sadly on the side of the throne, Daedalus was seized and detained awaiting judgment in one of the fouler dungeons of the realm.

And judgment was not long in coming. The king's legal advisors had decided, with a subHe touch, to place Daedalus and his son Icarus on a bit of rock, broadly defined as an island, in the midst of the local ocean for the rest of their lives.

So as soon as the son Icarus could be torn away from the street corner where he and his friends were whistling at the girls, the unhappy pair were dumped aboard a warship and transported to their natural and eternal goal.

In crossing, the sturdy ship encountered one of the storms so frequent in the legends of this time, but unfortunately this was before the era of William Tell and the wretched pair did not escape. They were delivered safely, oh so safely, on the ghastly little island along with enough provisions to keep body and soul intact for a while. Then the ship's commander mockingly withdrew and the lonesome two watched him over the horizon until they were quite alone.

The first thing Icarus did, being a resourceful lad, was to take a brisk walk around the island to make sure that there were no settlers who might have pretty daughters. Icarus was a romantic swain. Having determined without satisfaction that they were neighborless, he lay down under a convenient rock and. still resourceful, devoted himself with admirable diligence to the contents of a small keg which he had resourcefully filched from the ship's grog supply.

Meanwhile Daedalus also took an explorative walk, but with other motives. He was looking for a tree. Because he knew that

If a man can write a better book, preach a better sermon, or make a better mouse trap than his neighbor, though he builds his house in the woods, the world will make a beaten path to his door.
-Emerson.

wood floated, and that to leave this hideous little rock one must surely float also. But his dreams of a boat were scuttled ruthlessly. The only vegetation on the entire island was a repulsive sort of fungus faintly resembling ragweed. His only discovery had been the person of his son slumbering in the lap of Bacchus and getting his pasty complexion painfully sunburned. Daedalus, moved either by paternal instinct or a subconscious desire to smother, covered the face of Icarus with a newspaper, and sat down on the keg to brood. His brooding wasn't going well at all when suddenly a humane seagull subtly dropped a feather in front of him. Inspiration seized Daedalus. If one must float to escape, why not float upon the air?

In his lifetime he had heard allusions that this was impossible but no one had proved it. This was great! Immediately he went to work collecting feathers, for the place was literally infested with gulls, and before long he had a sizable pile. Then he began to build himself a wondrous pair of wings, for he was a skillful artisan, as has been set down elsewhere.
This work lasted a number of days during which his son played solitaire with a pair of dice and poured out his sorrow by pouring out what was left of the wine. Finally Daedalus completed his wings and went to bed that night with what might have been a Christmas eve feeling, if only Christmas eve had been invented.
The next morning he was in a high state of agitation, and so were the sea gulls, for this was something they hadn't reckoned on. Daedalus, securely fastened onto his wings, perched on a rock and flapped himself into the breeze. Cautiously he Derformed what he thought to be the correct motions and cautiously he rose up in the air. This was really the stuff!

He had just turned towards home when he noticed Icarus below thoughtfully regarding his aeronautical father as one of the colorful visitants so common to his inebriated condition. Again Daedalus was moved by questionable paternal love and sailing down to their prison brought Icarus to a reasonable degree of soberness. Then he put him to work collecting feathers and set about fashioning a second pair of wings for his wayward son.

Soon these were completed and both prepared to wend their weary way home. At first Icarus was shaky but he soon got the feel of the air in his face and was ready for the long flight. From their position they could see great distances in all directions. Their island looked like a reef and to the north they saw their home town through the ethereal haze. Gliding in long thrilling swoops, climbing in exhilarating spirals they soared homeward, drunk with the limitlessness of space.

Icarus was suddenly overcome with an exultation that filled his body with boundless energy as he joyously soared higher and higher. The sea below was a thrilling blue dotted with rich green islands and the sky was delicately fluffed with little clouds floating silently on the summerly wind. Daedalus, old and practical, kept his mind to his task and labored on, while his son, overcome by lightness of his youth sailed up into the sky.

But then tragedy struck. Icarus slipped into unconsciousness because of the great height and exhaustion from his exertions. He fell in a sickening drop towards the sea. The wind tore the wings from his back and hurled him into the deep where he frightened a passing fish.

Daedalus flapped on strangely unmoved by his son's death. At last he landed in his home city and was happily greeted by his friends and relatives, whose source of income had been cut off by his arrest. He also learned that the cruel and tyrannical king was dead, having been killed, oh so ironically, by choking to death on a feather.

NIGHT SKY

Bob Davenport

The sky, high above, was a black velvet set with diamonds;
And there were all sizes of diamonds.
The big ones, sure that they would be noticed.
Stood and shone from near-off.
And the little ones busily twinkled from faroff.
They were worried for fear I wouldn't see them.
While the moon, like a silvery, complacent mother.
Beamed upon her multitudinous children, and Warned the wind to blow intruding clouds away.
I couldn't help watching them.

PINCH HITTER

Virginia Medley

Now that it is spring again it makes me want to hunt up my old baseball scrapbook and furn through its glue-smelling pages.

I like to think back over those exciting nights under the arcs, when with two men out and two men on, the big pinch hitter steps up to the plate. As the umpire crouches close, breathing on the catcher's neck, the crowd is hushed to a breathheld stillness.

Suddenly the ball comes hurtling through the air-plop!--into the catcher's mit. The umpire makes that defiant jab into the air. Strike one! Then the surging rumble of disapproval from the crowd which breaks into a roar like breakers on the surf.

Again that breath taking stillness of the crowd, waiting, waiting. Then suddenly a flash of the bat and-crack! All eyes leap to the diminishing ball. Away it goes, over into the promised "home land" beyond the fence. A home run!

But wait, the umpire says. "No." Foul ball! But how can he be the one to judge, just one person? Why, we saw it with our very own eyes, the whole 2000 of us, and he dares to say it was a foul! He ought to be reading braille instead of trying to tell us that was a but, oh well,
That's baseball.

WINTER ON THE FARM

Edith Scott

The poplars stood bare and naked around a big empty house set back against a bluff. It was winter. The wind howled around the house, and in the distance the barn door banged. Below, the road wound off around the hill, the frozen ruts showing irregular tracks where horses, wagons and cars of the few travelers that passed our way had slid about in the mud.

Mother, Father, and I spent most of our time in the kitchen. It was a big bare room. No matter what Mother did, it still lacked cheerfulness; but it was warm, and there was the smell of fresh bread hot out of the oven, and Mother moving the pans around made a pleasant clatter that took away some of the loneliness. The other rooms were large with high ceilings and all had the same bare look about them.

Paint and her colt were in the bare field on the other side of the road. The field stretched off for a mile or more and then dropped down into a little meadow. Father had brought the horses home for me the fall before along with a big bay mare. Both horses were typical Indian cayuses, fairly small with long streaming tails that were now being whipped about their hocks by the winter wind. Out in the barn the bay mare and the cows were munching hay, the steam rising from their bodies and mingling with the odor of the hay and leather. At times there was the jingle of a halter chain or the old mare stamping her feet on the hard packed dirt of the barn floor.

As soon as the mare was fed and saddled in the morning, I would start on a cold and lonely four mile ride to school. The school house was a little one-room unpainted building. Big rocks were scattered around it to help bank it up. It was made out of old pine boards and was replacing the other school house that had burnt down. Colored pic. tures brightened the walls and frilly curtains at the windows, added a bright and cheerful note to the forlorn little building. The top step was invariably broken and left unrepaired.

We all tried hard to be the first one to find a buttercup in the spring. When the snow was barely off the hills we would begin looking for one and soon started bringing them triumphantly to school. After that we spent most of the noon hour and recesses looking for wild flowers as they blossomed out, each variety at its own special time. First were the buttercups, waxy and golden. We would find them on the southern slopes cudded underneath the rocks. Next came the blue bells and shooting stars that furned the hills into a glorious riot of color. As we brought in the big colorful bouquets of these flowers, we would soon fill all the vases and empty bottles we could find about the school house with them. After we had shoved them into a bottle and the teacher had rearranged them, we set them wherever we could find any space on the window sill, among the papers on the teachers desk, which occupied the end of one room, or on the stand that held the water bucket and wash basin.

Some times coming home in the winter it would be dark before I reached home. The stars were bright and the wail of a coyote in the distance often penetrated the darkness. It was a lonely weird sound that made me kick the mare and hurry on toward the beckoning light of home and the evening chores that awaited my arrival.
While I unsaddled and fed the mare and cows, Mother would bring a milk bucket out. Soon from the other side of the barn I could hear the milk hitting the sides of the bucket, the rhythmic sound growing deeper as the bucket filled. The cats' incessant mewing mingled with the soft swish of the milk as it was squirted into the nearly full bucket and added another note to the night-sounds in the barn.
As we left the barn with the bucket of warm, sweet milk, my fuzzy black puppy romped up to us. Sometimes the five lambs I had raised the summer before would be with him. They would all follow us as we went on about our other chores. Then we would go inside for a big hot supper. Sometimes it consisted of a platter of ham fried to a golden brown, a big bowl of potatoes, golden juicy corn, a large bowl filled to over flowing with halves of peaches and juice, and big fluffy slices of home made bread.
Later I would play with the puppy or watch Father skin a coyote and stretch its hide by pulling the soft furry skin over a Vshaped frame and then setting it away to dry.

Three evenings of each week we watched for the mailman, almost the only traveler on our lonely road during the winter. Near Christmas time there was more excitement and hope than usual as the mail car appeared over the hill possibly bringing big mysterious packages along with the day old paper.

After Mother had finished the dishes it was time for bed. The lamp was blown out and it was quiet inside the house. If it were still early I could sometimes hear the call of a Whip-poor-will or the hoot of a big gray owl as he sat in one of the great poplar trees near the house. From my bedroom window I could look out across the field still and smooth under a blanket of snow. The trees looked like weird black skeletons in the moonlight, silhouetted against the white snow. When the field dropped off into the little meadow the snow turned gray and then vanished into the darkness that hung over the foot hills and mountains across the river.

ON DUNKING DO-NUTS

(A Parody on Hamlet's Soliloquy) Paul Pickette
To dunk or not to dunk-
that is the question:
Whether 'tis better as we eat to suffer The scowls and censure of our tried companions.
Or to forego the juicy dripping sweetness And as dry do-nuts eat them? To dip; to dunk
And splash, and roll one's tongue around The tidbit, thus to seek enjoyment Such as one dreams of, 'tis a consummation Not lightly to be sought. To dip, to dunk, To drip, perchance to slop, ay, there's the rub;
For in one moment's pleasure who can tell
What friends we've lost, what tales they've spread
'Twould give us pause. There's the respect That makes it hard to live and find enjoyment.
Thus social graces spoil a longed-for treat And what folks think of us must enter in. So in the end we save our reputation.
To dreams of dripping do-nuts, then farewell!

INTO THE GRAY DAWN

June Berkey
Eighteen gray figures marched into the gray dawn of early morning as I stood behind watching. Among the last, my brotherblonde, and a little taller than the rest-held my attention. As they passed from sight, I imagined what went through his mind before he and his 17 fellow buck privates would arrive at the induction center.

He was just old enough to remember when the Armistice was signed 24 years ago, and now, on this November 12, while he seemed drawn as if by a magnet into the unknown, he recalled the significance of that fateful day in 1918, and prayed that our country would not spend another November 11, under the sorrow of war, as was yesterday.

He looked about him at his fellow comrades. They were shorf, tall, skinny, fat; each from different homes and with different backgrounds. Some should still be in high school and others had not had that advantage.

Yesterday he was home, silting with his family, watching the hungry fire lick about the wood on the hearth. Mother and Dad were still as dear as ever and little sister was growing up. He will miss his old bed and room, packed with books and magazines, and plastered with maps and pictures; the familiar, homey yard and brilliantly colored leaves strewn over the ground. In a few days, he will write home and we, recognizing his "Thanks Uncle Sammie" in the right hand corner of the envelope, will fully realize that he's in the army now.

Arriving at the induction center, my brother jumped out to see his new home, through the fog. Here, he would learn to fight for all the pleasantries that those two weeks recalled. Here he would learn to fight for his God and country .... The officer in command called attention, and 18 gray figures disappeared into the gray dawn.

COMMENCING

Natalie Werner

At last I've reached the goal. After 12 years I'm about to commence. I am using the word commence instead of graduate because every speaker l've heard at any commencement has impressed me with the thought that I'll not have finished. I'll be starting on to something new. So I'm not graduating. I'm commencing.

I remember my second day in kindergarten. This is the only thing that I remember of that important class except that I was the only one in my class who hadn't cried on the first day. I remember that on that second day I stood looking up at the top floor of the school building after my mother had left me. It was four stories high. To me that fourth floor meant the eighth grade. At that time the epitome of success. I wondered if I would ever get to the eighth grade. Would I ever be grown up? I was always afraid that I would never grow up.

And then I was in the eighth gradedreaming about high school. Before I knew it, I was in my frosh year. And what a year! Here I was, the typical frosh who carries all his books home nights, who studies 'til all hours of the night, who, the day that grades came out was sincerely and honestly worried about flunking. Now I know what I'm going to get and forewarn my parents. But all the time I was a frosh, and the two and one-half years that followed, I was dreaming about the time that I would march up to some important person, shake hands, and receive my diploma. Why, I was even worried about what I would wear on Impersonation day!

So here I am, a Senior. (Capitol "S") I have reached a goal. I say "a" goal because that is exactly what I mean. I have a lot more goals to reach before I am ready to give up.

My next goal is college. I think an education is important. And for once in my life, I believe this is the first time, I shall work at two things at one time. I shall work at college, yes, but primarily I shall try, in my own small, but nevertheless important way, to make this world a better place in which to live.

To reach that goal will take a lifetime, and I'm not sure that I will ever know exactly how far I had gone to achieve it. It won't at all be like getting a high school diploma or a college degree. It's a goal that can't be reached in one lifetime or by one person, but each succeeding generation makes its step forward.

And I feel sure that there are millions of American, English. Chinese and other youths who are continually commencing to a new and better life. Not person by person will we be going about to reach our goal, but nation with nation.

IT CAN'T HAPPEN HERE

Marion Crane

A senior went to heaven once, (As all good seniors do) And as he paused at its white gates, He saw a freshman new.

Patiently waiting to be let in. The seniors' scowl defaced the morn, And the freshman blushed and trembled At the mighty senior's scorn.
"How did you get here?" the senior Grumbled loudly. "How can you Enter here, where even seniors Have but seldom gotten through!'

Just then a trumpet blasted, and Saint Peter op'd the gate. And motioning the freshman in, He bade the senior wait.

In the little freshman trotted. Marvelling at the sight Of such beauty-his surroundings Ablaze with pure light.

He saw the high school students Getting their shiny wings, And having their haloes fitted. Oh, he saw all sorts of things!

Then finally, Peter asked him: "How would you punish sin? For instance, would you, a freshman, Let that lordly senior in?"

The astonished little freshman Stared, as he heard Saint Peter state: "Unless a freshman vouches for him. A senior can't get past the gate."
"Come, tell me, what's your answer?" And he answered with a grin, "I think he's learned his lesson: Go and let the poor guy in!"

A STUDY IN "BILLIARD BALLS"

June Berkey

While studying portraits of some of my ancestors, and from my observations of them, I have brought together some of the advantages and disadvantages of being bald. Some,

I have gathered from conversation with them, while others are obvious.

In the summertime, a bald head is cooler, and the owner thinks that to be burdened by a heavy shock of hair is like a woolen overcoat. It is an advantage for a wife to have a bald husband because his is distinctive and readily found in a crowd. Being bald is economical. There is no need for brush, comb, or mirror. Fewer haircuts are required. and often a neck shave will suffice for a hair cut. No tonics are needed. He has freedom from parasitic insects. The customer, as well as the barber, appreciates the fact that no question arises as to which side of the hair is parted.

There are of course, disadvantages, noticeably as follows. The bald-headed man is more vulnerable to attacks from flies and mosquitoes. In addition, he is more susceptible to drafts. This is especially disastrous, when, on a cold day, the Stars and Stripes pass down the street in a parade. This is also true in air-conditioned theatres and in sleeping in the wide, open spaces where night caps must be provided. Furthermore, he has more face to wash, and doesn't know where to stop unless he keeps his hat on.

Baldheadedness belongs to the two extremes of life, as it is the tendency of mankind, in connection with hair, to start with little, develop in abundance, and slowly recede.

ESCAPE

Marian Smith
It was a warm day, and a dry wind blew over the long fields of yellow grass. I walked by myself, yet, somehow, I didn't feel that I was alone. I was surrounded by living things: the ground under my feet was soft and covered with dull green grasshoppers. Even the paper and paint box I carried seemed alive as I walked faster, getting farther and farther away from the houses already far behind me on the road.

My eyes missed nothing and my mind was already mixing the blues, greens, and yellows in my paint box. Here there was no war, no social or economic problems, no political speeches, no social distinction. Here I forgot my personal problems. Here I reveled in the beauty of another world.

I sang loudly.

Miles stretched before me with no buildings to obstruct my view, no noon-hour whistles, no rattling of busses to jar me from my infinite and complete happiness. There were no people to ask me if I had a date to the dance Friday night, or if I had heard the latest: that Johnny and Frannie were going "steady"; no one to inquire whom I liked the better this week: Boyd or Ollie. But how could I be alone when my mind was exuberantly happy with thoughts of yellow grass, of tall, clean-smelling pine trees, and miles before me leading to nowhere?

The farther I walked, the more unconscious I became of the realistic world. The more I thought of this new and quiet mood, the less I wanted to think of giving it up. Giving it up for what? How futile my life seemed when I looked around towards the road. Why did I get up every morning at 7 o'clock? Just to catch the 8:10 bus? Why should I catch the 8:10 bus? The bus driver was always cross. the bus always crowded, and who, I should like to know, would miss me if I stayed in bed a little longer and caught the 8:20 bus? I could think of no logical answers for these questions I asked myself. Yet, as I walked along. I knew I would have to turn back down the road. I knew I would get up the next morning at 7. I knew the bus driver would be cross.

My happiness was only temporary.
I came to a tall pine tree, independent of all the others, and sat down under it. I opened my paint box and jar of water, and soaked my long brush. I painted wildly, not caring to make a painting that fulfilled the requirements of a well-balanced piece of art. Only the colors mattered because here the sky was really blue, the dead grass really yellow. I used every color I wanted to use, whether it was the color I saw or not. When I had finished, I had no work of art, but every line, every color represented my mood. To me it was beautiful.

It wasn't until the shade of the pine tree disappeared that I realized it was getting late. I closed my paint box and began walking back. Far off down the road I could see the tops of a few houses. The sky wasn't blue now and the grass was a dull yellow. With every step I took. I felt as though I were leaving a part of me behind in "my other world." But nothing could ever hurt that part of me.
And I would come back.

HERO WORSHIP

Anna Maria Jones
My little brother is an ardent admirer of "Hop" Harrigan. Perhaps in his tenth year, he has reached the age of hero-worship, but call it what you may, Peter idolizes "Hop."
At the appointed time each afternoon, one can invariably discover him seated before the radio, tuned full blast, munching a bowl of dry "Oaties." Just why it had to be "Oaties" and nothing but "Oaties" was beyond me until it dawned on me: "Oaties" sponsored his hero's serial. (No pun intended.)

With his rumpled reddish blond hair, his freckled face stretched in a partially toothless (due to a recent extraction) grin from ear to ear, he sits, oblivious to the household. He is treking through the jungles of wildest Africa, shooting down Zero planes, with various embellishments added to the sound effects, or valiantly sticking to his guns, which I doubt the hero ever saw. No daring escapade is beyond the scope of his imagination and as he sits beaming, simply enthralled, I can hear the crunch, crunch, of the dry "Oaties:" (ten cents and ten box tops of the same entitled him to a Genuine Cowhide Hop Harrigan Wallet) used as a medium, I suppose, to transport him to the realm of unheard-of heroism.
Despite my skepticism of Mr. Harrigan, I, myself, have a warm spot in my heart for "Lil Abner."

NIGHT FALLS ON WAR

Bob Booth

If you had walked a narrow, dusty road in a now-conquered country, one dusty twilight, you might have seen a small, tragic figure trudging wearily off into the darkness, lost in its own sorrow. In another country, on another day, you might have thought of him as just another boy, who hadn't known his lesson or had been punished for some schoolboy's prank-but not on this land, not on this day. For on that August day, that hot morning, they had come. The war-birds from across a continent had hurled forth their doom and destruction to the populace, death and pestilence streaming forth like silver rain, plunging deep into the earth, springing forth huge fountains of rich black soil
And these great winged servants of conquest had brought this boy's world toppling down around his feet, in a heap of rubble. The children in this peaceful village had gone forth to view the wide-winged warbirds, fascinated by their graceful soaring power and by the volcanoes of earth, erupting from their peaceful land.

The boy had rushed toward his home, to the thatch-roofed hut that had been home. For now all that remained was a pile of stones. His mother, warm-shouldered, kind-hearted, his refuge from the storm of life, was no more. His father, stolid, unfearing, had met death. Both had been buried under a swiftly-falling avalanche of rocks.

The boy thought, this is war, this is war ....
And now the tired little figure is moving slowly down a dusty road, muttering his hate of these flying things.

Now the golden skies are again filled with the ominous drone of these birds of death, the same sounds that had filled the sky this morning, in another world. Now great, golden vultures, streaked crimson with the blood of the innocent, fly back to their nests and a small form from below shouts hate and defiance to them as they fade into the rapidlydarkening sky.

But as they fly on, they draw closed the curtain of darkness on that tragedy, closing on the supreme horror of war, as the cries of hate and revenge grow to a crescendo, promising vengeance on these marauders, who are without souls, without hearts.

And the tired sun sinks low into its fiery sea of blood

A DAY AT HIGH SCHOOL

Sid Schulein

Ed was reminiscing. It didn't hurt too much. What a day! He thought of the events which had occurred only a few hours ago. First period-algebra
The teacher's voice, "Where's Ed White? He's supposed to be here on time." Sud-denly-bang! crash! screech! Well, what if he was late to class. He was in the office trying to help a new student! And he had an excuse, didn't he?
He sat down and buried his nose in that fascinating Spanish book. Oops, he had it upside down. He suddenly was struck by a brilliant thought. He would start his petition for Moe Flaherty for A. S. B. president around during class. He did. It went up one row and down another. Then it reached the arms of a student who promptly laid it on the teacher's desk. The air was rent with shouts of "What's this? What's this?" He soon realized that the entire class was looking at him.
"A little petition I was circulating . . . ."
The beloved petition was rolled into a ball and deposited in the wastebasket. Several of Ed's friends were not too friendly with the teacher and gave nasal cheers. Ed saw him. self as a martyr and stalked up to the desk. Luckily the bell, as it does in most moments of dire tragedy, rang. He grabbed the ball of paper out of the basket and smoothed it out. The teacher snapped, "Leave that where you found it!" All he said was, "Who do you think you are. Hitler?"
Oh, well, he might like the new school.
